Composition:

Rice is a plant of the family of wheat or oats that can reach up to 1.8 m in height. There are many varieties of rice but most of them come from two wild species. The main is the kind Oriza sativa, which is the asian species and from where the majority of varieties of all the world. Another species is the Oriza glaberrima, from the delta of Niger in Africa. The rice is a source of energy very valuable. Rich in carbohydrates, provides some 350 calories per 100 gr. These hydrates are transformed into energy. The main source of energy is the starch, the white part of rice or what remains of the grain after the husked. Provide proteins, does not contain gluten.
